middle and northern portions. Mar- this received the "southern portion."

Jacob and Hester Visser had two sons and a daughter, Alida. To their two sons, Dirk and Jacob, they gave two portions of their land—the middle and northern, respectively. The middle portion passed on to Dirk's son, Jacob, born in 1755, and known as the "Patron." In 1778, this Jacob bought the Van der Heyden mansion, or pal- ace, as it was sometimes called, which was built over fifty years before of bricks imported from Holland. It was one of the best examples of Dutch architecture in the country. Its dimensions were fifty feet by twenty feet, with a hall and two rooms on a floor. The massive beams and braces projected out into the rooms. It is described by Washington Irving in the story of "Dolph Heerling, in "Bracebridge Hall." The weather vane, a horse's head, at full speed, was placed by Mr. Irving above the turn- ing of the doorway of his own home, Sunnyside, at Tarrytown, N. Y., when, in 1833, the old Van der Heyden house was demolished.

There is no coat of arms for the family to be had from Holland, for Heerling was little practiced there, but some member of the family must have settled in England, for in the British annals we find the coat of arms of the Vander Heydens well established. It is blazoned: Sable, three mullets pierced argent, on a canton, or, a rose of the field.

The mullet, when it is pierced, de- notes in heraldry a spur. Whereas a gold spur, or a mullet pierced, or sig- nifies knighthood, a silver spur, or a mullet pierced argent, goes with the title of esquire. There was an ancient English order known as the Esquires of the Silver Spur, which was slightly changed in the reign of Queen Vic- toria. Whether or not one of the Eng- lish Vander Heydens belonged to this ancient order no one seems to know.

The canton in heraldic symbolism stands very high. It was granted only by sovereigns and makes especially distinguished the symbol it contains. In this case, the symbol is a black rose, but its significance seems to be lost in the mystery of forgotten his- tory.

Answers to Correspondents.

To T. R. C. who asks for informa- tion of the family of Robert Cham- bers, a description of the coat of arms and general characteristics of the Chambers family if any such generaliza- tions have been made.

Robert Chambers was born at Stir- ling, Scotland, and came to this coun- try, 1655, and settled at what is now Perth Amboy. A John Chambers, who was born in Scotland, and died at Trenton, N. J., 1746, may have been Robert's son, John's son, Alexander, held many offices. He was an alder- man, and commissary of the state troops, in the Revolution. His wife was Rosa, daughter of Thomas, John's grandchild. Their grandson, John Story Chambers, born in Trenton, 1822 (married Elizabeth Scudder, grand- daughter of Anne Scudder, who was guide to Washington at the battle of Trenton), John Story Chambers, Jr., was an officer holder, and his home was built on land which had been in the Chambers family for a hundred years or more. He married Emma Fien, whose father, a grandfather, Benjamin Moore, resided in Washington at breakfast after that memorable cross- ing of the Delaware.

The coat-of-arms of the Chambers is blazoned: Sable, a cross couped, or, surmounted by four martlets rising, or Crest: on a ducal coronet, or, a demi-eagle, displayed, gules. No motto is given with this coat-arm, but there are other arms, for different branches of the family, and many have mottoes, for example, Advance—advance, Lax, Mili Lauris—light is a laurel to me, Non Prodero, Sed Victo- ria—not the spoil but victory. These are all mottoes of the Scottish fam- ily, and the arms illustrated is for the family of John Story Chambers, Jr., another Chambers motto, and differ- ent heraldic charges include the lion and the bear. The Chambers of London have an interesting coat-of- arms, a man with a pick-axe working in a copper mine and the planet Venus are the charges.

Characteristics of the Chambers family are great business or execu- tive ability, and reserved manners. "If only slightly known, as a rule, they are not popular."

To "One of the Barringtons" who asks for a description of the family coat-of-arms with symbolism.

The blazon, or description of the Barrington, is as follows: Argent, three chevrons, gules, a label of as many points, azure.

Crest: out of a valley crown, or, a hermit's bust, with cowl, vested palely of six, argent and gules.

Motto: Honestas quam splendida—things honest rather than splendid, or honorable acquisitions rather than splendid ones.

The supporters of this coat-arm should be two griffins, wings expand- ed, or, each garbed with a label of three points, azure.

The label is a difference for chiefs of families; great business or execu
